History and Culture

Newtownabbey takes its name from the ancient monastery which originally stood in a field near Whiteabbey Hospital. The abbey was built by the Cistercian religious order (Trappist Monks) around 1250 but was damaged by the army of Edward Bruce in 1315. The ruins of the White Abbey survived for centuries but today there are no visible remains.

Carnmoney Hill is one of the greatest landmarks within the Borough. It is the site of many souterrains and raths including Dunanney Rath or 'Fort', which dates back to Celtic times and overlooks Carnmoney Cemetery on the southern face of the hill.

Carngraney (the Cairn of the Sun) in Roughfort is a prehistoric, 10-chambered, wedge-shaped tomb. Roughfort Motte nearby is a medieval mound and was a site of assembly for the United Irishmen under the command of Henry Joy McCracken before the Battle of Antrim in 1798. An oak tree dedicated to the United Irishmen stands in a field opposite the motte.

Carnmoney Parish Church is the site of an early Christian settlement traditionally believed to date to the 5th century during St Patrick's time. The old church was demolished in 1856 to make way for the present building. In the churchyard are many graves of local and international interest. For example, Nicholas Grimshaw, founder of Ireland's first cotton mill at Whitehouse in 1786, and 'Humpy Joe' Joseph Gills Biggar, one of the most controversial figures in Irish/British politics.

In Ballynure the ancient graveyard opposite Christ Church is a reminder of Jonathan Swift, author of Gulliver's Travels. Ordained in the Church of Ireland in 1695, Swift's Kilroot parish included Ballynure and he is said to have preached in this graveyard one Sunday when a congregation failed to turn up at the parish church. A blue plaque commemorating Swift's links with the area has been placed on the church ruin in the graveyard.

Each year the Ballyclare May Fair hosts one of the oldest horse fairs in Ireland. The dealing and haggling is intense and horse dealers from all over Ireland make the pilgrimage to Ballyclare on the Tuesday of the May Fair week.

Several historical societies and groups are active within Newtownabbey, running popular programmes of events throughout the year.

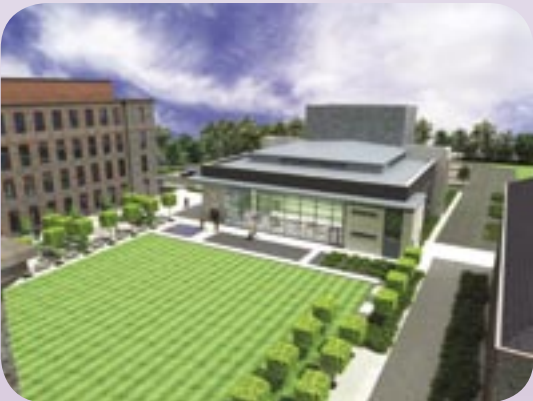

Heritage walking trails leaflets are available through the Council along with the contact details for the societies and general information about local heritage.

The White House is fine example of a plantation bawn (stone fortified dwelling) dating back to the 16th century. It stands on the foreshore of Belfast Lough and is owned by the White House Preservation Trust. King William III met with his military officers at the White House in June 1690 prior to the Battle of the Boyne.

Mossley was a flax spinning Mill from 1834 up until the 1990's. Newtownabbey is strongly linked with the industrial revolution and old mill buildings are a feature of the area. The Council has undertaken a massive restoration project at Mossley Mill and the development includes new civic offices and a tourist information centre.

By the end of 2009 the Mossley Mill site will contain a unique blend of civic and community facilities including a 400 seat theatre, interpretative centre / museum, exhibition space and extensive conferencing facilities. These are all set in a natural environment with Mossley Pond and Threemilewater River Park adjacent to the site.

Sentry Hill Historic House & Visitor Centre

Sentry Hill is a 19th century farmhouse in the Parish of Carnmoney, County Antrim. The house and its contents provide a rare insight into life in rural Ulster during the 19th and early 20th centuries.

Sentry Hill was the home of the McKinney family, who came to Ireland from Scotland in the early 1700s. Remarkably the contents of the house have survived almost intact. This is largely due to William Fee McKinney who was born in 1832 and lived at Sentry Hill for most of his life. William built up a remarkable collection of diaries, family letters and an extensive library of books and pamphlets. Along with souvenirs from family travels abroad, William collected natural history specimens and items of local historical interest.

Over the years many guests have been warmly received at Sentry Hill by the McKinney family. The last of the family may now be gone but their welcome remains and the door is now open for you. You can wander down the path through the sheltering trees and step inside the snug old farmhouse. As you cross this threshold you will stand where the past shakes hands with the present.

Visit Sentry Hill and take part on a guided tour, view a short introductory video in the converted byre and see many of the fascinating objects and archives once hidden from view in the cupboards and drawers of Sentry Hill.

A small refreshment area is located in the old stables at Sentry Hill. Here you can enjoy morning coffee, a light snack or afternoon tea and purchase a souvenir of your visit. Or if you prefer the outdoors, take a stroll around the informal garden, the location for many of the McKinney family gatherings

Walking

Carnmoney Hill

Carnmoney Hill is one of a chain of hills, steeped in history and biodiversity, which watch over Belfast. This Woodland Trust managed site has recently been designated a Local Nature Reserve, which celebrates the value of this site for both people and wildlife. Walking trails through the site are available for all abilities, with some leading to the summit for spectacular views of Belfast Lough and beyond. While enjoying the walks, visitors will also experience ancient woodland, mature hedgerows, wetlands and open water and, if you are quiet, the wildlife these habitats support!

Monkstown Wood

Monkstown Wood is a Woodland Trust owned site which consists of a linear path through a range of habitats including a river corridor, hedgerows, semi-natural woodland and open spaces. This area is a gentle walk suitable for people of all abilities and the range of habitats will allow the visitor to appreciate the importance of natural open space within this densely populated area. The range of habitats also provide an important resource and great transport corridor for our local wildlife.

Bird Watching

The variety of parks and open spaces in Newtownabbey can provide bird watching opportunities throughout the Borough; however, the bird watching haven of Newtownabbey has to be on the shores of Belfast Lough. Belfast Lough has various designations due to the presence of important bird species. The range of habitats including mudflats, lagoons and important feeding/roosting sites adjacent to the lough, provide ideal conditions for these birds. Species to be noted include Redshank, Oystercatcher, Goldeneye and Scaup. Wildfowl species such as Wigeon, Mallard and Teal as well as waders including Dunlin, Ringed Plover and Bar-tailed Godwit plus many more can be seen in this area.

Loughshore and Hazelbank Parks, Gideon's Green and Whitehouse Lagoon all provide excellent opportunities to watch these birds in their natural habitat.

Cycling

A number of high quality cycling routes exist within the Borough and the Council is continuing to extend the network. The circular route around the Valley Park links to the linear path following the Glas-na-Braden River eventually joining the Loughshore at Gideon's Green.

The Newtownabbey Way is a new route, again linking the Loughshore to the urban part of the Borough. From Whiteabbey the path follows the Threemilewater River under the impressive Bleachgreen railway viaducts and emerging into Monkstown local nature reserve and on to Monkstown Village Centre. By the end of 2009 the route will be extended to the Council's headquarters at Mossley Mill and further to Corrs Corner.

For those looking to go further afield, the Loughshore path is part of National Cycle Network 93 which allows cyclists (and walkers) to make their way to the centre of Belfast and from there, to Lisburn.

The majority of these paths are away from busy traffic.

Details of the route and how to hire bicycles can be found on the Council's website: www.newtownabbey.gov.uk

Fishing

Coarse fishing is available on the Sixmilewater River and trout fishing is available outside Ballynure.

Straid Fishery

The 22 acre lake at Straid is one of Ireland's top trout fisheries regularly yielding fish over 10lbs with boat and bank fishing available. Refreshments and fishing flies are available from the lodge. For the novice there are classes to introduce you to fly fishing.
